Last day of the meeting. Pakistan was, on the U.S. motion, given the Chairmanship for next year, and the [redacted] was fixed for Washington in early September 1953. There were fifteen concluding speeches, with John Snyder the first orator, and the Mexican Governor the last.

John had a large buffet lunch for the U.S. delegation, and some of the Embassy people.

In the late afternoon, we went to the Jockey Club for a reception given by Messrs. Black and Rooth. This club, about a half hour drive from the centre of the city, is a fine modern structure, dominating three race courses, one turf, one dirt, one steeplechase. At least a thousand guests were assembled, gobbling shrimps, downing Scotch and sodas, and chattering away.

We got to the airport at 9:30 and took off at 10:15 p.m. on the Coast Guard plane that had brought us down.
